Foreword. The Quantum Computing community often publishes in Physics or dedicated journals : these journals were the first to promote Quantum Computing ; this is where the international community is to be found ; they typically offer higher impacts and lower response time (QINP, NJP, Phys. Rev., Phys. Rev. Lett...). I partly followed this trend, without neglecting the established CS journals (JCSS, I&C, LMCS, MSCS...). Although some outstanding results in formal models of Quantum Computing make it to ICALP, MFCS, FCT and even QIP (the worldwide top conference in quantum information), generalist conferences therefore play a lesser role than in the rest of CS (except in quantum algorithms/cryptography/information theory). Instead, more specialist conference allow us to do just what conferences are supposed to : address the right audience.
